Yesterday we agreed that we should ask Chad to review the language of our clarification email. Chad asked that the following sentence be removed: "He also said he agrees that property owner approval should be required before street vending could occur on any particular property."

Chad said: "I know I told Miki that this language was acceptable to Mike, but we are trying to find something better."

Given our goal, I said "ok." Then added: "We sure would like some input / review of any language that is intended to protect us."

Chad said: "Of course."

I wish I wasn't so suspicious... What could help us more than a simple property owner approval requirement?
